5. Fees for Recurrent Reviews and Approvals

Recurrent reviews of security programmes or security related documents are required triennially in accordance with the National Civil Aviation Security Programme and National Civil Aviation Security Training Programme. This means that stakeholders are required to re-submit an updated or revised version of their programme. This process ensures that the Aviation Security Programmes remain current and up to date with the new measures and requirements for implementation.

The revised version may encompass changes which are needed to ensure that ICAO's standards and recommended practices, and new Security Directives and requirements are considered to mitigate new and emerging threats to civil aviation. The increase or decrease in operations and change in organizational structure must also be reflected in the updated programmes. Hence, a document or programme review fee must also be paid to the GCAA by the respective aviation stakeholders for recurrent review and approval of the security programmes or related manuals. Therefore, the fees in Table A are also applicable to recurrent reviews and approvals of Aviation Security Programmes and related documents for each type and category of aviation related operation.

The amendments made by stakeholders to their Aviation Security Programmes, Training Programmes and other documents must also be submitted to the Authority for review and approval. An amendment may entail a small change, or a significant change made to one or more sections of a document.

A "Review of Amendments" fee must also be paid to the GCAA by the respective aviation stakeholder for review and approval of Amendments submitted to update the programmes. Table B sets out the fees charged for the "Review of Amendments" for each type and category of aviation related operation.
